"WILD BJONX"

The Most Expensive Animal in the State of Ohio.

It was under the above caption that County Agent E. M. Rowe in Hancock County, Ohio, attracted the attention of the crowds at the County Fair last year to see - a Hessian fly under a watch crystal. It was his part of the statewide campaign to hold back wheat seeding until after the fly-free date. County Agent H. L. Andrew in Auglaize County advertised his campaign by showing a box with the wheat up which was labeled "Sown too Early" and another with no wheat showing because it was "Sown After Safe Date". An accompanying label ran "Hessian fly will leave for new fields in September. Which will it choose?"

The campaigns in all of the counties were well organized, as is indicated by the fact that only from two to ten farmers per county ignored the "fly-free date" warning.
